Re: File No. S7-2026-15 – Semiannual Reporting

Dear Secretary,

I appreciate the opportunity to comment on the Securities and Exchange Commission's proposed rule, File No. S7-2026-15, regarding optional semi-annual reporting.

I respectfully oppose the proposal because I believe quarterly reporting remains an essential component of transparent, fair, and efficient U.S. capital markets.

Quarterly reports provide investors with timely, standardized, and legally accountable information. While reducing reporting frequency may lower compliance costs for some issuers, those savings must be weighed against the increased information asymmetry that would result from fewer mandatory disclosures. Public markets function best when all investors have regular access to reliable information.

Reducing required reporting from three quarterly reports to one semiannual report would likely have several unintended consequences:

- Retail investors would receive less timely financial information while institutional investors would continue to benefit from private research, alternative data, and frequent management interactions.
- Price discovery could become less efficient as material information accumulates over longer periods before being reflected in SEC filings.
- Market volatility may increase around the remaining reporting periods because more information would be released at once.
- Companies facing operational or financial deterioration could remain under reduced public scrutiny for longer periods.

The proposal is intended, in part, to encourage long-term decision-making. However, short-term management behavior is driven more by executive compensation, incentive structures, and market expectations than by the existence of quarterly reporting itself. Reducing transparency does not necessarily promote better corporate governance.

If the Commission believes reporting requirements should be modernized, I encourage consideration of more targeted reforms, such as:

- simplifying Form 10-Q disclosure requirements,
- eliminating duplicative narrative disclosures,
- scaling requirements for smaller reporting companies, or

- streamlining specific Regulation S-K requirements that create unnecessary compliance burdens.

These approaches could reduce issuer costs without reducing the frequency of standardized public disclosure.

The U.S. capital markets have long been regarded as the global standard for transparency and investor protection. Mandatory quarterly reporting has been an important part of that reputation for more than fifty years. Maintaining frequent, comparable, and reliable disclosure continues to support investor confidence and market integrity.

For these reasons, I respectfully urge the Commission not to adopt the proposed optional semiannual reporting framework.

Thank you for considering my comments.
